Central City Development & Redevelopment Projects

Prepared by

May 2017
Purpose: This document is intended to provide a five-year window on real estate development in Portland’s Central City. For the purposes of this document, the Central City includes the following sub-districts: Downtown, West End, University District, River District, South Waterfront on the west side of the Willamette River, the Central Eastside and Lloyd District on the east side of the river. The subsequent pages begin with general comments followed by a summary of projects under construction, projects in design, projects in concept and projects completed in the last five years.

Overview: Portland has historically been a very attractive second-tier real estate market. As the largest city between San Francisco and Seattle, Portland has a national and international reputation as a sustainable, vibrant and trendy city with a legacy of aggressive growth management strategies and robust investments in alternative transportation. It is well recognized for its livability and the city continues to attract a highly educated workforce. Economic leaders are focused on job creation in the growing sectors of clean tech, activewear, software, research and advanced manufacturing industries. Cumulatively, this has resulted in a marketplace that is largely stable and fueled by consistent migration. Particular to 2017, as in the previous year, the real estate marketplace has exploded in a large number of projects across all sectors in nearly every geographic area of the city and region. With high demand and lesser supply, this has presented a challenge of affordability. Current projects providing notable additional supply may mitigate this challenge, while the city continues to explore strategies particularly in the housing sector. Nonetheless, this growth represents the solidification of Portland as an alternative preferred location in the Pacific Northwest.

General Comments – Markets

Office Development – The Portland office market continues to move positively as unemployment in the city has dropped to a record low of 3.9 percent. According to Colliers, citywide vacancy rates are 8.6 percent, with central city at 10.5 percent. Rental rates in the Central City average $31.47/ft², with Class A rates at $33.48.

At the core, these rates reflect the fundamental stability of downtown’s finance, insurance and real estate sectors. This demand is reflected in the construction of Park Avenue West, a 546,000-square-foot, mixed-use tower one block from the center of the city. In South Waterfront, the vision of a biotech center leveraging off of Oregon Health and Science University (OHSU) is coming to fruition with completion of the 650,000-square-foot Skourtes Tower to be followed by 360,000-square-foot OHSU Ambulatory Center and the 300,000-square-foot Knight Cancer Institute. Creative office space continues to grow rapidly in the Central Eastside with the completion of the 96,000-square-foot Eastside Exchange. It is also worth noting that many smaller creative companies are finding homes in repurposed small-scale industrial buildings located on the east side, in the Pearl and at the perimeter of the Central City.

Retail Development – Portland has long been recognized as a strong per capita retail market, and downtown Portland is often used as an example of urban vitality built on a mix of national and local independent retailers. With strong Central City employment, upscale residential housing, a growing tourism base and retail sales that have increased during the last five years, downtown Portland has the pillars for continued long-term retail growth. For this reason, both of Portland’s Central City “shopping malls” – Pioneer Place in downtown, and Lloyd Center on the east side, are undergoing major renovation. Nearly every major project in the Central City includes ground floor retail space. Of particular note, many smaller one-time industrial buildings along the periphery of downtown and in the Central Eastside are transitioning into new uses, many for craft food. This retail success supports the continued proliferation of less formal venues, including farmers markets, food carts, and "pop-up" retailers. This success is due to the city's continued commitment to its Downtown Retail Vision, which offers a targeted series of design improvements, zoning changes and financial incentives.

Housing Development – Portland has long led the nation in going “back to the city” with downtown residential development. Housing development in the 1990s largely concentrated on high-rise, high-end condominium projects on bare land, mostly in the Pearl District and South Waterfront. These projects transformed the neighborhoods into national models of mixed-use, sustainable development. It also has stimulated the growth of mid-rise projects at the perimeter of the Central City, both on the east and west sides, and more recently the fruition of the Lloyd District as an office/residential community with its own unique characters. According to the Portland State Real Estate Quarterly, present occupancy for long-term rental citywide is 94.6% with rent growth pegged at 4.2%. Citywide permits have steadily climbed from 12,365 in 2014 to 14,723 in 2016.

Since 2010, roughly 5,000 new residential units have been built, ranging from affordable to workforce to luxury housing. Roughly one-third were affordable units, and a similar number ownership opportunities. Another 3,000 residential units in 18 projects are under construction. Exclusive of the Post Office site and Zidell Yards, the Central City sees another 2,400 units in 14 projects on the drawing board. These are located throughout the Central City with concentrations in the Pearl, South Waterfront, Central Eastside and Lloyd District. These numbers are exclusive of projects adjacent to the Central City, such as the Conway property development (projected 1,100 to 1,500 residential units) and Goose Hollow activity such as the recently completed Mill Creek 140-unit Jefferson Flats at 2040 SW Jefferson in Goose Hollow and the Press Blocks, a proposed full block project with an office and residential building on the site of the former Oregonian printing plant. In total, there are approximately 14,000 units proposed or under construction in some 200 projects in proximity to the Central City.
Hotel Development – Portland-area tourism continues its long consistent growth pattern. According to Travel Portland, tourist spending in the Portland metropolitan area has grown by 34 percent since 2010 to $5.1 billion in 2016. Hotel occupancy for the city was 76.7 percent (up 1 percent from 2015) and the citywide average daily rate grew to $136.96 (up 4.5 percent). For the Central City, the average daily rate grew by 14 percent from 2014 to $182.45 with occupancy at 81.4 percent. Air travel continued to grow with a 2.4 percent increase of domestic passengers and 9.3 percent of international visitors. Tourism in the city created $245 million in local and state taxes (increasing by 69 percent over 2010) while creating 36,300 jobs (up by 24 percent from 2010).

In development terms, this strong market place has resulted in several notable projects in varying formats moving forward throughout the city. Approximately 970 rooms have been added to inventory in the last five years. There are seven hotel projects currently under construction in the Central City, which will add roughly 1,250 rooms to the city’s inventory in the next two years. There are another eight projects in varying stages of design, which would add another 1,900 to 2,100 rooms upon project completion. The largest of these is the 600-room Convention Center Hyatt Regency, which is currently in design stages. Other particular initiatives include the AC by Marriott, Porter by Hilton and Canopy by Hilton, each a national chain with a product focused on the local setting. Also of note are independent hotel projects including the Jupiter Hotel expansion and the Society Hotel, offering an alternative hotel experience.
